How Do The Poor Fit In The Catholic World?

by Rachel West, OSF

The Catholic Church has always taught its members that concern for the poor shown in works of mercy is a defining mark of the individual Christian. The phrase "option for the poor," however, which the U.S. bishops define as their right to "put their needs first," has particularly been emphasized. Pope Pius XII defined "right to the goods of the earth; 2) if individuals and governments did not share their goods with the needy, the poor would be justified in taking them; 3) all Christians have the duty to work for the welfare of the people and to do so "not merely out of their superfluities." The Latin American bishops recommended most recently that:

This truth occupies a central place in Church teachings on poverty since D61. As the Church took on more of a "global face" during and after Vatican II, the Church strongly emphasized that poverty is a moral issue, and that people should be provided with the means to improve their lives.

Cabinet Examines The Carbon's Tie To Journalism

by N.M. Gasco

On March 28th, the cabinet discussed the Case for our city.

There were two main problems addressed in the meeting, brought up by Brian Adler. One problem is that the Carbon doesn't meet the needs of the campus as well as it has in the past, due to a change in leadership, a change in staff, and an overall change in image. These problems are mainly centered by production issues such as reporting, printing, decisions regarding content relative to size, etc. The second problem involving a much deeper issue however, was a bigger concern to the cabinet members and became the focus of the meeting. That problem is that there is no institutional support for the paper, nor any means with which to train one for staff positions, including positions from Advisor down to writers. The problem is that there isn't a journalism program offered to meet such needs.

Dr. Adler presented the board with a memo in which he suggested several new courses, courses he felt to be "crucial and necessary for the college to produce a credible document (newspaper)." Ideally, Adler would like to see a journalism minor or major developed. Such a curriculum would include feature writing, editorial management, layout and design, desk-top publishing and other related classes.

Adler also suggested that a three-quarter time to full-time person, preferably one with a strong journalism background, be hired to advise the Carbon. As of now, Adler, who is current college adviser to the Carbon, pointed out that he is not a trained journalist.

"In a sense, we reinvent the wheel every year," Adler said regarding Carbon production. He stressed the fact that previous editions of the Carbon were "through out energy to properly train their replacements by the time their term is over. He sees this as "an ironic for a college that values mentorship because in this case, "the editor should be the ideal model." Because Marian lacks a journalism course, Adler said many high school students with such training and interest don't come to the Marian State University.

Mayor Hudnut Promotes Recycling In Indianapolis

Mayor Bill Hudnut today sent a crushed beverage can into one of the City's 30 new recycling containers using the "Hudnut Hook" that helped to launch the Indianapolis anti-litter campaign in 1977.

"This is the next step in our ongoing effort to promote more recycling in Indianapolis. We collected 50% more cans, plastic, and glass bottles last year than the year before, and we're expanding available recycling sites all over the Circle City," said Hudnut. "We want Indianapolis City to be a clean and green place. That's why the City of Indianapolis, through our Department of Public Works and the Clean City Committee, is working hard to reduce the amount of trash that is eventually disposed of in our community." Mayor Hudnut, who endorsed these recycling campaigns, urged Indianapolisans to take advantage of "roll-off" containers that have been placed at Kroger, Marsh, Cub, and O'Malia supermarkets, as well as the Indianapolis Zoo, the Children's Museum, and various shopping centers throughout the community.

The City's Department of Public Works and private trash contractors collect more than 2200 tons of garbage in Indianapolis each day. Garbage is taken to the City's Trash-To-Energy plant, where it is recycled into steam. The steam is sold to Indianapolis Power and Light to heat and cool downtown buildings.

"Our City offers one of the most efficient and least expensive trash disposal systems in the entire country, and we've been turning our garbage into steam for more than two years," said the Mayor. "But we've got to do everything we can to reduce the amount of trash that's thrown away. That's why I'm proud to kick off this recycling expansion and our new hotline," said Hudnut.

The Mayor announced plans to expand recycling at schools. A new "Indianapolis Recycling Hotline" will be established.

A few points of clarification are in order regarding the issues raised in the Kunkel articles dealing with the College’s Housing Policy:

1. The hearing involving the three panels was held with full furnishing of false information to avoid compliance with the housing policy was held on Tuesday, January 29, 1991. At the conclusion of the hearing, the students were informed verbally of the panel’s decision and had the right to appeal that decision to the President. The students were also notified of the possibility of further financial assessments by the college for unpaid room and board fees for spring semester, 1991. The letters of notification were sent on February 1 by certified mail and were received on February 8, ten days after their verbal notification of the CIP decision. Therefore, the students had a full eleven days from the date of their hearing to contemplate their appeal, if they so chose. However, the students have indicated on several occasions that they did not disagree with the decision rendered by the President.

2. The official record of the College Judicial Panel hearing of January 29, 1991 indicates that the students were made aware that further financial assessments could be made by the College and that collection of room and board fees was due to the Panel’s jurisdiction. The students were advised by me on February 11 that the decision to collect their room fee for spring semester 1991 was an administrative decision made by members of the President’s cabinet (not just a Dean for Student Affairs decision). They were further advised that they could appeal that decision to the President. Since there is no specified deadline for an appeal or an administrative decision, the students requested and received a meeting with the President on April 3, 1991. At the April 3 meeting, the students had an opportunity to present reasons why they should not be held financially responsible for their current housing obligations and to share any personal circumstances they believed would warrant a reduction of the $946.00 charge. On April 5, the President issued his decision to the students.

3. Although it was reported that the three students were not knowledgeable regarding housing procedures, in early fall 1990 each of them obtained from Cathy Bickel, Director of Residence Life, a form entitled “Housing Contract,” I will refrain from making a response due to the number of inaccuracies and misquotations that appear in that contribution. Suffice is to say that his information could not have come from primary sources.

By virtue of their signed housing contract for 1990-91, the three students pledged timely payment of appropriate housing fees. Their falsification of information to avoid compliance did not relieve them of their obligation. In regard to the issue of housing policy, the students have come to full realization that only through personal initiative and self-directed responsibility can the student take control of his or her environment.

The English major returns to the hardwood next season in her senior year!

If what happened on your inside happened on your outside, would you still smoke?

Jodi Yonts
Named All-Conference Hoopster

by Lee Ann Beasler

Junior forward Jodi Yonts was named to the MCC All-Conference women’s basketball team. Yonts has led the Mariah Lady Knights basketball squad in scoring the last two seasons, averaging over 20 points per contest. Her strong game and superb sportsmanship has contributed much to the ever-rising Lady Knights. Yonts also earned honorable mention for the NAIA All District teams. The English major returns to the hardwood next season in her senior year with great expectations for the team. With Yonts, the returning hoopsters and incoming sophomores, Mariah could quite possibly get a District championship.

It all occurred to me when a friend of mine tried to make me feel better about a jealousy thing I had—"You're more natural looking," he said. I sat there and looked down at my light bulb, twisting my salon-curl hair, and thought "What is junk?" Then it occurred to me that today we really have no concept of, much less a concern for, what is real or fake. In order to achieve a "natural" look, most women have to go to no ends striving for it. It is an age of "fake" tans, temporary "permanent" curls, silicone breasts, colored contacts, and "natural" tone make-up to sew borders all over your face. Just this past Sunday I read about a new fad of women injecting collagen (derived from rats) into their lips to make them fuller and pouty. Our generation has often been accused of not having its own style. We listen to The Doors, Jimi Hendrix, Led Zeppelin, and The Rolling Stones. Our styles have gone back and forth between the 50's and 60's—mini skirts, leggings, guys rolling up their jeans, and the west-cook was even "in (well, almost)" for a while. And maybe it's just me, but aren't every 3 out of 5 songs you hear on the radio remixes of a golden oldie? Don't get me wrong, I have no intention of not wearing make-up, of not listening to older music, or of boycotting the local tanning salons. I just couldn't help wonder what we have to look to in the years ahead. If I am lucky, they will be able to inject with Christie Brinkley's appetite, Roseanne Barr's femininity, or Milli Vanilli's fine vocal chords. I am just making a plea asking: will the real "New Generation" please stand up?

If you have any tests this week (and chances are you do) you might be getting a little bit nervous about them. Do you feel sick before tests? Does your mind go blank when the professor hands out the papers? Do you have a fear that you will flunk even though you're well prepared? These are all symptoms of test anxiety, says Doug Daugherty of the Transition Center who made a presentation at Stokely Mansion on this very subject Wednesday the 10th at 6:00 p.m.

Daugherty said there were two components to test anxiety: worry and emotionality. Most of the people who attended this lecture felt they suffered more from the worry component. He emphasized that test anxiety is learned from some experience in our past. Maybe we had a bad experience once on a test and from then on we feared taking tests. Because the anxiety is learned and not innate, we can change our attitudes about tests by letting the anxiety trigger some kind of coping response (such as relaxation).

Daugherty pointed out several techniques to practice to help us not to reach that point of relaxation. In one, the counting to three method, the person counts to three as he inhales, holds his breath, and then exhales. This one obviously helps restore breathing to a normal rate and helps slow down a quickened heartbeat. The tense-relax method, doctor's method, and palming method are also helpful to some people. The one I find myself using the most is called the cognitive method. In this, the person repeats to himself such calming statements as, "This test isn't a measure of my self worth. I have no reason to be scared since I'm well-prepared" and "This test won't affect the rest of my life.

Daugherty says that we must keep the test in its proper perspective, not giving it more importance than it's really worth. "That way, if a person does poorly on a test, he won't think that all his chances for success are over." Another way to conquer test anxiety is to imagine yourself in the test situation before the test and then practice a relaxation technique. The more you do this beforehand, the easier it will be to get in a relaxed state when you're taking the test. Others find it helpful to create a pleasant scene in their minds to rid themselves of the anxiety.

Daugherty says, "Being a little anxious is a good thing. If anxiety is too low or too high, performance will decrease, but a certain amount of anxiety is needed to do well." Don't fret too much over a test. Life will continue regardless of whether or not you get an "A" on one test. Be prepared, and go in there knowing that it is only a test of your knowledge, not of your self-worth.

Just A Thought

- by N.M. Gasco

Imagine a world of darkness. Imagine a world of nothingness, consumed by a great empty void. Imagine writing an article entitled 'Just A Thought..." and not having a single thought to write about.

Well, since our world is full of just such contradictions, Nicole has given in to Skinner's view of operantly conditioned human beings and has decided to declare every Tuesday to be a "No Thought Day." This policy is to be effective immediately and will be officially recognized on Marian calendars--just as soon as Nicole can gather them all together and find a few hundred permanent markers.

However, in order to convince the Administration of our freedom to choose whether or not to engage in brain activity on Tuesdays, Nicole would like to present the following survey:

YES, I fully agree to forfeit my right to function on Tuesday.

YES, I fully agree to forfeit my right to function on Tuesday.

YEARBOOK NEEDS YOUR HELP

The Yearbook class needs YOUR photos and snapshots for inclusion in the 1991 Marian College Yearbook. If you have any black and white or color photographs of this years campus events, we would like to borrow them. This is your chance to help out and have your photos go down in history. To participate, put your name and basic information about the photo, on the back of the print. Deliver the photographs to the Business Department office (room 204, Marian Hall). We need to receive you pictures no later than Tuesday, April 23. Your photos WILL BE RETURNED.

We are particularly in need of photographs of the following:

- Senior portraits (If you are graduating and have not submitted a photo, please do so)
- Homecoming (especially of the Court)
- Valentine's Dance
- Spring Formal
- Mardi Gras
- Mock Rock
- Christmas Dance
- Madrigal dinners
- Athletic events: baseball, tennis (men & women), intramurals, cross country & track, basketball, volleyball, golf, and softball

We can also use snap shots from your spring break and informal photographs taken around campus. This is your chance to BE PUBLISHED! Hurry, and bring us those photos. Thank you for your help.
