11-9-2018

Contribution of Lipid Droplet Breakdown to Coxiella Burnetii Infection

Rachel Silliman OMS-2
Marian University - Indianapolis

Stacey D. Gilk
Indiana University School of Medicine

Minal Mulye Ph.D
Marian University - Indianapolis

Follow this and additional works at: https://mushare.marian.edu/mucom_rd

Part of the Medicine and Health Sciences Commons

Recommended Citation
https://mushare.marian.edu/mucom_rd/85

This Poster is brought to you for free and open access by the College of Osteopathic Medicine at MUShare. It has been accepted for inclusion in MUCOM Research Day by an authorized administrator of MUShare. For more information, please contact emandity@marian.edu.
Introduction

Coxiella burnetii is an obligate intracellular pathogen that causes Q fever. It is transmitted to humans through inhalation of aerosols or ingestion of contaminated food or water. The pathogen is an obligate intracellular bacterium and causative agent of culture-negative endocarditis. Usually none in man. Coxiella is an obligate intracellular pathogen and causative agent of culture-negative endocarditis. It is transmitted to humans through inhalation of aerosols or ingestion of contaminated food or water. The pathogen is an obligate intracellular bacterium and causative agent of culture-negative endocarditis.