Indy Museum of Art celebrates 2nd birthday

The Indianapolis Museum of Art proudly commemorates its second birthday with the dedication of the Sutphin Fountain on Wednesday, October 25, at 8:00 p.m.

Guests celebrated with free popcorn and a variety of beverages, heard the festive momentum of band music and saw the skies illuminated with fireworks as they viewed the newly completed fountain, located directly in front of the Kramenr Pavilion. At 8:15, ballerinas graced the fountain itself, accompanied by the Jordan College of Music Brass Quintet, entertaining from the second floor balconies culminating with Paul Dukas’ “The Fanfare.” The fountain was gradually activated, climaxing in the second chorus of music and dancing.

This night display brought to fruition the “dream” of someone who had originally envisioned a fountain of this magnitude as germane to the Museum complex. The fountain is a gift of the Sutphin family, and will be known as the Sutphin Fountain, given in memory of Samuel Sutphin. His sons Samuel R. and Dudley V. Sutphin are trustees of the museum. Its design is rooted in the concept of Indianapolis as a circle city and has inspired the official Museum logo. The fountain itself is 70 feet in diameter, its base surrounded by 448 blocks of buff Indiana limestone. The water recirculates at 10,000 gallons per minute propelling between 1000 and 2000 gallons of water into the air at any one time.

Constructed to operate the entire year, the fountain is a build-up of ice-formation on the fountain during the winter will create unique ice sculptures.

Representing the sophomore class are Kathy Harbor and Anne Monnot. Kathy is the Social Council Secretary and is a sociology major. Kathy is a native of Indianapolis.

Alliance, Ohio is the home of Anne Monnot, the other sophomore princess. Anne is very active as a member of the Drum and Bugle Corps and Music Club and is also a wing representative in Class Hall.

ETS graduates school program to assist minority groups

A new program designed to help the nation’s graduate schools seek out potential students from minority groups is underway this fall.

Called the Minority Graduate Student Locator Service, the program is offered by Educational Testing Service. ETS estimates that about 10,000 to 15,000 students could initially use the new service which is offered free to both students and institutions this year.

According to J. Bradley Williams, ETS director of the project, “One of the problems facing graduate schools seeking to increase enrollment of students from racial and ethnic minorities is that of identifying potential students.”

Now, students will have a chance to voluntarily complete a special 17-item questionnaire as one step towards entering graduate school.

Information about the academic interests and goals of Black, American-Indian, Asian-American, and Spanish or Mexican-American students who wish to pursue graduate level education, will be available to those institutions seeking to bolster minority enrollment.

Admissions officers may then contact students directly and invite the applications of those whose particular interests could be served by their schools’ graduate offerings.

The locator service will be used first by graduate schools in Spring deadline set for poetry

The National Poetry Press announces its spring competition. The closing date for the submission of manuscripts by College Students is April tenth. Any student attending either junior or senior college is eligible to submit his verse. There is no limitation as to form or theme.

Announcement

As a service to the students of Marian, the Student Residence Committee has set up a literature table in the lobby of the student center.

Literature on both the Democratic and Republican candidates at the national, state, and local levels is provided. Students should feel free to pick up a few copies of assorted literature, buttons, and bumper stickers.

It is hoped that this service will provide students with some general knowledge of candidates and issues to be decided on in the November 7th election.

This Friday the Committee hopes to have a straw poll vote. All students are invited to participate by sitting at the tables and casting their ballots. Please contact one of the following:

Night of terror?

Kathy Chating

Here it is once again: the time for all good little witches and goblins and ghosts to dust off their broomsticks and shake out their sheets to celebrate their annual holiday.

Halloween today is quite different from its original—All Hallows’ Eve. All Hallows’ Eve, the night before the celebration of the Catholic Feast of All Saints, like many Christian observances, has become secularized and commercialized.

When Christianity began, the Church fathers thought it sensible to celebrate their feasts at the traditional times of celebration. They set the day of the Feast of Christ in December, sharing the pagan celebration of the winter solstice, the Saturnalia. Easter was also set by the time of a pagan feast.

All Hallows’ Eve was the time of Witches’ Sabbath—so once again the Church saw a way to give another meaning to this day—making it the vigil of one of its great holy days. The people celebrated in costume with candies and fruits for the children. A “trick,” reminiscent of the witches and goblins, was played on anyone who would not “treat,” reflecting his Christian charity.

But tricks are not the tricks of today. They were then mischievous pranks that were played in good fun and endured in like manner—both sides getting a good laugh out of it. Today’s “tricks” tend to be of a more serious, often sinister, nature.

Like everything else, Halloween has become commercialized. Little children are taught the commercialism as greed. It is not important to have fun-it’s important to get more candy than Johnny-down-the-street.

They are taught to destroy. If someone doesn’t participate in the “treating,” or does not give treats considered worthwhile, they are very likely to find themselves victims of soaped windows or screens, overturned trash cans, or a driveway covered with broken glass.

Things like this change the adults’ attitudes toward giving. Every year warnings are issued about unwrapped candy, fruit—which may contain pins or needles, small digits of poison, and other things that could play havoc in a child’s body. We sit horrified when we read of such things, but, in a way, it is the way some adults battle the growing vandalism performed by the children.

Halloween has become such a problem that in most cities, trick or treating is allowed only during the afternoon hours of the Sunday before Halloween. These cities are seeking to reduce vandalism, but they are also seeking a return to the earlier spirit of Halloween.

Anyone who has had to get soap out of a window screen or clean up garbage from a front lawn can realize that Halloween has become a night of vandalism and fear for many. More of a bother than it is worth in terms of enjoyment.

Is it that we have almost come full circle to the old sabbath of the witches, a pagan night, a night of fear?

What’s going on here?

It is official. The 1971-72 All-star slay line team has been named. The following is a rundown of the members.

Slytherware - Mary Elminger. Virtual figurehead at the allover slay line. Mary’s knives have been known to sparkle. At her best in a catch-up situation.

Cuins and glasses - Helena Mallott. Shouts “glasses” vigorously forms the line.

Scrapers - Camilla Consolino. picturesque scraping form. A right-handed scraper, Camilla is never flustered. When the line is backed up to Bombay, Camilla keeps her same even strode. His good hands. Led all members with 100 breaks for every 100 dishes handled.

Pusher - Dave Martini. Unselfish tail-end of crew. Dave performs his task in relative isolation. Breaks dishes only when he has to. Besides being a member of the cross-country team, Dave also takes in the glass rack relay team. Has a knack for stacking conveniently.

A slab line field day is in the thinking stage. Contestants will be judged on poise and speed. A special event will be the slope line slalom singles. In this event, a contestant must perform all jobs, and must pass through certain gates strewed about the course. Fifty particularly sappy people including Artilla the Hun will be hand-picked to supply the trays.

Critical questions confront the eleven million newly enfranchised voters approaching the ballot box. Has the man elected on a promise to end the war broken faith with the American people? Can the American people stomach the war now that the color of the bodies has changed? Has the sense of moral outrage over the Napalm campaigns been exhausted? Do the nominations of Camel and Haynesworth to the highest court mark a planned retreat from the commitment to racial justice? Is the bugging of Democratic National Committee headquarters symptomatic of an emerging Orwellian nightmare? Has the Nixon administration sold out to big business?

And what of the senator from South Dakota? Will his economic proposals bankrupt the economy? Do the Eagleton fiasco and the “refining” of the proposals of the primary portend a presidency based on vacillation? Will McGovern, by reducing the military budget, diminish the diplomatic flexibility of the U.S.? The questions are, of course, too many. There are simply too few simple answers. But remove the varnupitation and the inflated promises and four facts are clear:

First: The candidates vying for the presidency differ widely in ideology and outlook.

Second: The new voter who refuses to cast a ballot is shirking the responsibility which he claimed he deserved. To refuse to vote or to vote casually is to solicit the disgust of those who demanded the 18-year-old vote. It is also to invite the smear “I told you so” in history from the cynics and sceptics.

Third: The college student cannot choose to remain unaffected by the direction of national leadership. If the president of the United States chooses to tolerate unemployment and underemployment, for example, the Ph.D. today will continue to be the cab driver of tomorrow, and the student with B.S.’s and B.A.’s will continue to pour into secretarial pools and factories.

Fourth: The establishment lists to numbers. History will record that the young rose up from the college campuses in search of a leader to end a war they judged immoral. History should record that the young also managed to sensitize the nation to the need for ecological balance, population control, equal rights for minorities. By refusing to vote, the student invites inattention and guarantees that the interests of the young will not be served.

The message is clear. An important choice must be made. Those who use the ballot November 7 will participate in making history. Those who boycott the ballot box will succeed only in ripping themselves off.

The message is clear. Vote.

The Biology Club of Marian College is pursuing new ideas. Ecological responsibility is a constant theme in the club's activities. There is a trip planned for November 1. Club members along with members of the Chemistry Club will be going to Chicago's Museum of Science and Industry.

There is a plan in the making that would replace canned soda machines with machines having bottles. Biology Club president Rich Vanes claims the use of cans "encourages people to litter." The bottles, however, would be returned to the company for further use.

In the same vein is a paper recycling project planned for the spring. Newspapers, magazines, textbooks, candy wrappers, despised tests, and the like will be collected. It is hoped that many members of the Marian Community will contribute. Vanes feels it is important to understand an underlying principle of recycling. This principle is that recycling is a technological attempt to imitate nature. Plant and animal life travel in continuous cycles. Death is a return to the soil, which furthers future growth. Nothing is discarded in this age old system that works. Therefore, recycling attempts to similarly reuse items, rather than dump them in someone's backyard or something.

Progress in regard to the HEW grant remains in the infant stage. There is still only a general plan, not a specific one. The general plan is for a laboratory open to the community. When visiting Marian, Brother Sevenr surveyed what plant and animal life typical of this area was present at the lake site. What is not there will be added. When it opens to the public, it is hoped that the lake area will have what Vanes calls a "good representation of plant and animal life."

Knights get set for rough season

by Ken Hornback

Dynamic Ed Schilling, the man who in one season brought Marian's basketball fortunes to an all time high, has begun the process of readying his veteran squad for what promises to be a very exciting and rewarding season.

In Monday's bout, Gagan's Gangsters dealt the Red Hot Mamas another loss. The Indiana Bombers shattered Fischel's Farm Oats, 3M chalked up a win against Volley of the Dolls, and L&M demolished Brand X. Squatty and Friends romped over the Snatches, the Voluptuous Vollies expanded their victories by smashing the Marsh-Mellows, an undermanned Blue Yarn worked hard in three close games to defeat the Main Ingredient, while Wazuri also needed three games to best East Wing.

WAA play brings no upsets

by Mary Beth Blankman

Women's Intramural Volleyball produced no major upsets. However, quite a few close games maintained the competitive atmosphere.

Watch for a complete story on all the Knights in a later issue, as well as some information on an upcoming exhibition game.

Butt , Rangers, Gods, Lords post wins

by Ken Hornback

With football season almost over, Marian's men are being pulled off the field by upsets and injuries. Below is last Sunday's casualty list.

Butt 6
Rangers 0
Gods 41
Heroes 0

In what has to be termed an upset, a fired-up Butt squad squeezed by a punchless War team in a brutal defensive battle.

The only offensive play of any merit occurred early in the first half when ever-reliable southpaw Joe Kuzmitz blazed a scoring strike to streaking Rick Martin that was good for six big ones.

Jim Coch, Butt defensive line- man, played havoc with War blockers, busting in time and time again to sack his roommate quarterback: Alex "Notre Dame" Karason. In fairness to Karason, he had almost no time to pass, and when he did, the rain-slick ball was difficult for both him and his receivers to hang onto.

So, War is now history while surprising Butt has another week left to search for the things that will make them the new intramural champions.

LONE RANGERS 6
ELDERS 0

In another bone-crusher, the Rangers slipped past a team of the future, the Elders, by the same narrow 6-0 score.

Although the Rangers threatened twice in the first half, the alert Elders were equal to the task as sparkplug Terry Rugerie thwarted one drive with an interception and alert Steve Barretti caught Dan Hayden on the one as time ran out in the half to stop the other.

After intermission, neither offense could get going as play got rougher and tempers flared. But then in came Ranger quarterback Ken Aust, who was supposedly injured and wasn't going to play, and he picked the Elders apart with ease. Taking over on his own eight yard line, he alternated completions with Ken Tyrrell, Jerry Whalen, and Hayden to drive the Rangers 92 yards for a score. Hayden scored the touchdown as he hopped the last 20 yards with an Aust pass.

The Elders, not giving up, drove mightily down the field, but Hayden picked off an errant pass and time ran out.

Buffington, Hemmelgarn, and Ryan were standouts for the next weeks semifinal showdown.

The Gods will face Butt in next week's semifinal showdown.

VICE LORDS
TRUCKERS - Forfeit

In a wise move on their part, the Truckers decided to forfeit to the defending champions.

Offensive player of week: Jim Herbe, who scored once and passed for four more, was the overwhelming choice as offensive player in a week that had few offensive stars. Congratulations.

Defensive player of week: A tie between Vince Ryan, head-hunter for the Rangers, and Terry Rugerie, defensive ace of the Elders.

In the most brutal game of the year, it seemed that these two defenders handed out more licks than they received.
