Tornado roars past unnoticed
by Stacey Nicholas

At 2:20 p.m. last Monday a tornado touched down at 38th and Lafayette Road -- just up from Marian College. Like most of the West Side, Marian was caught off guard.

Although the information center is equipped with a weather alarm monitor/radio, Sr. Claire Whalen, Academic Dean, was not notified of the approaching danger until it was close at hand. Apparently, the weather alarm monitor had been unplugged the previous evening.

"It was so difficult to get to people," Whalen says commenting on the communication problem. Marian Hall lacks a public address (P.A.) system and alerting students and faculty was difficult. Controller Joe Ryan told the Colleg Council that the outdated system was removed in March of 1988 because it did not always work. Whalen continued, "It alerts us to the need for quick communication. People were cooperative," once they were reached.

Students also noted the lack of a well known emergency communication plan. Freshman Jose Flores comments, "I was walking to class, I heard the sirens. While in class, the bells went off and no one knew what it was."

Junior Lucy Griner was working in the Transition Center. "Nobody ever told us. My mom called from Brownsburg and told us before anyone on campus did."

The storm damaged many businesses around Lafayette Square Mall, but the college grounds were undamaged. The city reported no serious injuries resulting from the tornado.

Appleby wins advisor award
by Beth Peter

Dr. Drew Appleby, Chairman of the Psychology Department, has been selected the 1988 Outstanding Advisor from the National Academic Advising Association (NACADA) Region Five (including Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, and Ontario).

Appleby is "happy to win the award, but even happier for Marian College. Marian provides such a personal touch in education and this is the first time we have been recognized for excellence in academic advising." Now Marian is backed up by the award and is proven to be among the best.

The criteria necessary to apply for the award includes a caring attitude, effective interpersonal skills, availability to advisees, frequency of contact with them, actively approaching advisees, monitoring of student progress toward academic and career goals, mastery of institutional policies, support of advisor development programs, and advisee evaluations.

Appleby uses a broad approach to academic advising that incorporates (See APPLEBY p. 3)
Enrollment: quality or quantity?

I am really dismayed and angered at the lack of insight shown by the administration. They have developed the idea that the success of Marian College can be measured by a single number: the enrollment figure. Evidently, they believe that a growing student body is a definite sign of a growing college. In reality, that is entirely false.

What has actually happened is that the college administration, in its drive to take in more and more students, has accepted more students than it has the resources and the capabilities to handle. The faculty and the staff have been strained beyond their limits to take care of the students. Cramped classrooms, lack of seats, and lack of other necessary equipment are an all too common sight.

Many of the facilities that are here to help the students, such as the Transition Center, Business Office, etc., are impossibly swamped with the present workload.

The parking situation, which was bad last year, is now positively atrocious.

The living conditions in the dormitories are absolutely deplorable. Many students are forced to live three-to-a-room in rooms that barely have space for two. This is the administration’s idea of “success.”

The basic problem here is that the administration is making the common mistake of measuring success by quantity rather than quality. The administration should ask itself some basic questions. How good is an education that is given in overcrowded conditions with insufficient equipment? What kind of other living conditions does the college provide for the students when the students are forced into small living areas? How well can a student learn in such cramped and overcrowded conditions? Ultimately, it is quality, not quantity, that makes a college great.

A deeper problem is the lack of direction in the administration. The administration is blindly running after a number without looking where it is going. It is time that the administration determine some definite goals for the future of Marian College. If they wish to keep Marian a small college, then they are going to have to cut down on enrollment.

If they want to see this college grow, then they will have to put a limit on the enrollment until the college has developed adequate resources to deal with a larger student body. It would also be a good idea to make this an issue at an Open Forum so that the administration would have a good idea of where the people of the college would like to go.

This is a great college. Let’s work to keep it that way.

Parking fee

I am writing this in response to the editorial in last week’s paper concerning the $10 parking fee. As students at Marian, we deserve to know how our money is being used.

What is so important that the school needed an additional $5 per car this year? We do not have any new parking lots and our old ones are not being repaired. If we are only obligated to pay $5 according to our code book, why hasn’t someone explained the reasons for the $5 increase?

I would not mind the $5 going toward a new, well-lit lot that would make our school more accessible and safe. But, so far, no one knows why we had to pay the extra $5 and still park in the gravel or how this money will be used.

We have been “kind” enough to pay the extra $5, so will someone please be kind enough to explain to all the students where our extra $5 is now?

Ellen Frommeyer, a native of Indianapolis and graduate of North Central High School, arrived at Marian College as a transfer student from Ball State University. "I found out that I did not like a big college," said Frommeyer.

She feels that Marian's commitment to personal attention and the Catholic foundation of the college attracted her to the college. The liberal arts factor gives Frommeyer wider boundaries to use her degree.

As an English major with a minor concentration in Hotel Management through I.U.P.U.I., Frommeyer is preparing for a career in convention planning.

Editorial

by Stacey Nicholas

Last week's Carbon was a milestone in publication history at Marian College.

Thanks to cooperation and trust between the academic departments, the administration, Student Board, and the Carbon, the Carbon is now entirely published on campus.

A combined funding from department chairmen and the Carbon staff enable the community to purchase a PageMaker Desktop Publishing System. This gave publications a neater, more varied layout design.

With the help of Student Board, and the Computer Lab, a laser printer was purchased to enhance the desktop publishing system. Now documents can have a type set look without the expensive type setting.

Over the summer, Controller Joe Ryan purchased an electro-static plate maker in a package deal that included the new copy machine. Now the plates needed to run on the off-set press can be made in the duplicating room.

These accomplishments have saved the Carbon a great deal of time and more specifically it saved Marian College a great deal of money.

But, more importantly, it shows that if we work together we can be far sighted enough to make advancements that better the Marian community.

several components. The form and content need to suit the level of the student. Also, Appleby involves himself in "advising activities that include personal, social, ethical, and career planning components." He feels advising is most successful if it is delivered as an integrated combination of communication techniques.

During his sixteen years at Marian, Appleby has made a number of contributions to the college. He has initiated several programs on campus related to advising activities. Besides being a student academic advisor, he serves on the parent orientation panel and organizes the study skills sessions at freshman orientation. Appleby wrote the Honors Program handbook for students and advisors and is also responsible for coordinating career opportunities efforts among local colleges for students in psychology.

Appleby feels it is important and necessary to stay active. His next project is to write and publish a student handbook for the psychology department during his sabbatical in 1989.

On October 12, 1988, Appleby will be honored and presented with a recognition plaque and monetary award at the Awards Brunch during the NACADA Annual Conference in Miami, Florida.
Doyle Hall lobby remodeled

by Ray List

To the dismay of many students the Doyle Hall lobby was remodeled over the summer. The four year old carpeting in the lobby was removed and tile laid down in its place.

Joe Ryan, Controller, ordered the removal of the carpet because it was very dirty and full of burn holes from cigarettes. He wanted tile laid down instead of new carpet since tile is easier to clean and it removes the threat of the carpet catching on fire. The approximate cost of the new floor was $2,200 compared to a good carpet costing nearly $3000.

Ryan told College Council that they (the remodelers) could not match the old tile so they put down a blue stripe and the blue “M” was added to break up the white plane.

The reactions to the tile floor are largely negative. Jenny Richart, Doyle Hall Resident Director, said that Ryan did not talk with her before making plans to put tile on the floor. She found out about Ryan’s plans when the workers were taking measurements of the floor. She is opposed to the tile since it is noisier and less homey than the carpet.

The main impression of most of the residents is indicated in Sophomore Beth Mauer’s comment that the new floor “looks like a gymnasium floor.”

Resident Assistant, Terri Clark also was not happy with the new floor. She feels that the “rug made it (the lobby) cozier.” She does not like the tile since “it is cold. It looks like a basketball floor.

The general feeling of the residents is that the tile makes the lobby more like a public auditorium and less like a home. The residents are so opposed to the tile floor that they are passing around a petition to have the tile taken out and the carpet put back.

Students learn leadership skills

by Dallice Hesselgrave

“Be a tomato” was Mike Henderson’s advice to the students attending the Leadership Conference last Saturday. Henderson, Director of Student Activities, talked about what a leader is and what kind of leader a person should be. In saying “be a tomato,” he encouraged the leaders to be active and do something, like a cherry tomato plant that grows and multiplies. Henderson told how to schedule events to how to check out the big screen television for club use.

Next, Doug Daugherty from the Transition Center talked about stress. Daugherty encouraged the leaders to cope with their stress instead of just letting it build and he gave ways to avoid unnecessary stress such as exercising.

He also talked about the many support groups now available at the Transition Center to help the Marian students adjust and cope with their problems.

Dr. Drew Appleby, Chairman of the Psychology Department, explained what leaders need to do to maximize the efforts of their club or class. Appleby expressed his ideas of what leaders do to make their organization successful, such as listening to and respecting the opinions of their followers.

He told how organizations waste time and what kind of people are needed in order to get things done. He showed how to make an agenda and how to divide up tasks between members for efficiency.

Dr. Faye Plascak of the Psychology Department gave a test to the students to find out what type of leader they are. After taking the test, the students added up their scores and found which of five leadership styles they fell into. Plascak explained what each style meant and whether or not that style was appropriate for a successful leader. She also explained three different theories of leadership styles and what each one should mean to them as leaders.

Lastly, William Woodman, Dean of Student Affairs, closed the conference with a lecture on how a small college fives more opportunities to its students to be active in organizations.

Theater season announced

by Maria Mooney

The Marian College Theatre Department has announced its 1988-89 schedule of productions which this year feature two comedies, one drama and one musical.

The first comedy, William Shakespeare’s Taming of the Shrew, will be presented Oct. 20 through 23 at 8 p.m. in the Marian auditorium. The play describes the struggles of a strongwilled woman and a determined lover.

A Christmas Carol by Charles Dickens will be performed Dec. 1 at 10 a.m., at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. on Dec. 2, at 7 p.m. on Dec. 4, and at 10 a.m. on Dec 6. As the age-old drama progresses, the hateful Scrooge comes to see the joy of Christmas.

The next production, the musical Barnum, will be shown on Feb. 23 through 26 at 8 p.m. The musical portrays P.T. Barnum the showman from his beginning with the Barnum’s American Museum to the Barnum and Bailey Circus.

The final production, Present Laughter, was written by Noel Coward. The play concerns a prominent actor who is going through a mid-life crisis and how he deals with it by having affairs with younger women. This will be performed April 27 through 30 at 8 p.m. in Peine Theater.

Tryouts for the shows are open to everyone. The productions are free to all Marian students.

Lighter side

by Michael Rinard

After four long years of being an eyesore, being debated in finance meetings, and funded by major corporations, the Student Activity Center is finally a reality.

The purpose of the Student Activity Center is to provide something to do for the students who do not go home on weekends or breaks. It will be open twenty-four hours a day, throughout the school year, and for special occasions after the regular school year. The Center will have video games, a lounge, a small take-out for ARA food, (this may be a mistake), and free telephone service for the students.

It was only through the long range sightlessness of certain key Camp “M” officials that delayed this long-awaited and long-needed Center. Mayor Richard G. Lugnut, Jr., will dedicate the facilities on Tuesday, October 4, 1988, at 11:30 a.m.

When Joe Wagner, Camptroller of Camp “M”, was asked what delayed this much-needed Center, he said, “Well, that’s a good question. I plan to bring that subject up at our next committee meeting schedule for tonight. I really don’t remember what job I had in the planning of this new Center.”

Senior John Smythe, commented that the Center was talked about when he was a freshman, and he was real happy to see this come into being while he was still a student at Camp “M”. “This is the best place Camp “M” has ever built. I’m just sorry that I don’t have four more years to enjoy this Center.” Other students were very enthusiastic about the new Center.

A contest will begin shortly to select a name for the Center. Entries must be submitted no later than Friday, Oct. 21, at 6 p.m. The person whose name for the center is selected, will win a month’s all expense paid trip for ten to Rio de Janeiro. They will stay in the newly purchased condo of the keeper of the books of our own Camp “M” bookstore.

We wish good luck to all entrants, and all persons at Camp “M” are eligible to participate in this ceremony.
Freshman arrives from Guam

by Shannon Wichman

Imagine being eight thousand miles from home!

Darrell Romero, a 19-year-old from Tamuning, Guam, enters Marian as a Business/Art major this semester. Guam is under United States protectorship as a territory.

Romero chose Marian at the last minute. Following graduation from high school in 1987, he worked as a computer operator for his father, a pediatrics dentist in Guam. He decided this past August to go to college rather than work. A list of all the colleges in the United States with rolling admissions was quickly assembled. Aided by Admissions Counselor Jeanette Findley, Romero chose Marian College.

Marian's 114 park-like acres remind him of the trees and grass in Hawaii. "The people on campus are surprisingly friendly to everyone, even if they don't know each other." Although not homesick, Romero does miss the food and beaches of Guam.

Reggae and songs by the Grateful Dead top Darrell's chart. Tennis and work in the theater promise opportunities for participation. And yes, he wants to get good grades and blend in with other students at Marian College.

Although Romero hates crowded slopes, he loves to ski. If he does not go home for vacations, he hopes to spend Christmas with relatives in New Mexico skiing and Spring Break in Colorado doing more of the same. While in the United States, he intends to try night skiing.

What the academic future holds for Romero is unclear. He would like eventually to attend college on the East Coast, preferably Boston, so he can be near friends.

MCSA sets literacy project

by Tina M. Kunkler

On Tuesday September 6, 1988, Ellen Frommeyer, President of Student Government, hosted the Student Government Presidents of I.U.P.U.I., Butler University, and University of Indianapolis at a luncheon in Allison Mansion.

The committee met to discuss issues of student government roles, develop a common cause, and work together to give something back to the Indianapolis community. A year-long plan was tentatively set to promote literacy through tutoring.

The program would provide free tutoring to Indianapolis elementary and high school students. The tutoring will be provided by college student volunteers.

Joyce Johnston, Chairman of the Education Department, has agreed to encourage her students to work with the program. Education majors are required to complete a number of volunteer service hours. Tutoring hours would apply to that number.

Faculty, staff, and students of the four schools have agreed to write letters to Barbara Bush inviting her to speak on Marian's campus. Bush leads a national literacy campaign. Proceeds from this event will be targeted toward the tutoring program.

Three additional meetings have been planned between the four schools throughout the academic year.

Men's tennis tumbles
by Jennifer Scharfenberger

The Men's Tennis record stands as 1-1 at the end of their first week of play. Even though the freshmen were exposed to their first college match, they showed no nervousness, and were ready to play.

The team's first match resulted in a loss. Indiana Wesleyan is said to be one of the toughest small colleges in the state. "We only lost by one match with a score of 5-4. I was surprised how solidly we played against Indiana Wesleyan," said Coach Brad Kolter.

In the match against Anderson University, Marian was leading 5-1 after singles and went on to win with a score of 6-3. When Kolter was asked what areas need improvement at this point, he stated, "Doubles play could be stronger, but other than that, I am very pleased with their efforts."

The only match this week is Friday at Riverside Park versus Franklin College. Coach Kolter would like to see a lot of the student body turn out to support the team.

Cross Country outrun
by John Jones

The Cross Country team is off to a good season after competing in two meets.
At the Butler Invitational Marian finished last in the team competition. For the team standings, Brad Bechler ran first, freshman Brian Boyle finished second, and sophomore Rich Young rounded out the top three.

Bechler and Young continued their strong team standings finishing first and second respectively in a meet against Huntington, Goshen, and Tri-State.

In overall competition, Bechler finished sixth and Young ran a well placed eleventh.
