Fire department and detectives called to scene of Doyle Hall fire

by Tina Kunkler

Room 124 in Doyle Hall, occupied by Troy Peters and Chris Beard, was the hottest room on campus this weekend. At approximately 11:18 p.m. Saturday, Dec. 2, an unknown arsonist lit the posters on their door causing an area of 2 to 3 feet in diameter to burn.

Scott Vail and Lisa Reinwald were leaving the first floor east of Doyle when they smelled smoke. Upon discovering the flames on the door, Reinwald went to the lobby in search of a resident assistant, while Vail got a jug from his room, filled it with water from the fountain and extinguished the flames with the water.

Victor Breckler told Brian Easterday to call the Marian College Police Department, which in turn called the fire department. Easterday also sounded the fire alarm to evacuate the building.

Beard was off-campus for the weekend and Peters was in the Pit of Doyle visiting friends when the fire occurred. After evacuating the building, Peters was informed by another student that his door had been burned. He returned to the building shortly after the alarm had been turned off to see what damage had been done.

By this time the fire department had arrived and detectives and arson investigators were questioning the students involved with the incident. Peters, who does not think he has any enemies who would have set fire to his door, believes the fire was meant as a joke and not intended to harm anyone. “This thing was blown way out of proportion,” said Peters.

Peters said the paint on the door is charred and bubbled up and the door will require repainting. He and Beard have replaced the posters that were covering the door.

LecAnn Bessler, the R.A. on call that night, said the fire is still under investigation and no suspects have been named at press time.

Felicetti speaks on survey results

by Beth Peter

On Tuesday, Nov. 28, at 12:15 p.m. at the library auditorium, Doctor Daniel Felicetti, Marian College president, spoke at the Open College Forum on the results of the survey given to board of trustees members and all full-time employees of the college. In regards to a student center, Felicetti said that he sees the need for and supports the idea of some type of student gathering place, but at this time the acquisition of a new building for this purpose is not making sense. He believes that such an area could be constructed within existing space and that with no funding available, a separate building is not feasible at this time.

Sr. Norma Rocklage, O.S.F., Director of Mission Effectiveness, presented a first draft of a new Mission Statement.

According to Felicetti, there was an outstanding response to the survey. “It was astounding,” he said. Ninety percent of all full-time employees responded, meaning 151 people filled out and returned the survey.

The quantitative data has been collected and analyzed, but the qualitative data (written comments) is not yet complete as it is quite voluminous, but will be available fairly soon, according to Felicetti. He is protecting the confidentiality of this data.

When asked if Marian College needs to be distinctively different from other institutions of higher learning, 90 percent of those surveyed agreed with that and with the idea that we should shape who we are

O.K. I should be chastised for spouting off liberalisms on communism for the past four years. Conservatives have been vindicated; communism is falling. Everyday more and more Eastern European countries are calling for political reforms and embracing capitalism.

Well...maybe not.

It's much more probable that federal governments have failed at their task. In the Quest for Freedom by Mason and Leach, Chapter 21 provides the following idea. They say that federal governments are responsible for funding proximate solutions for unsolvable problems (unemployment, trade deficits). To do this they need to develop a market place of ideas that depends heavily on public opinion. To value public opinion, leaders must have faith in the virtue of the people.

Since the end of World War II, many Eastern European countries have been lead by the same party or group of people. The exchange of differing ideas is nearly non-existent. In recent years, the governments have been operating closed economies that have been unable to provide enough necessities and luxuries for the people. Without contributions from differing viewpoints some problems cannot even be proximately solved.

In the Baltic states, there has been an increase in nationalism among the ethnic populations. Soviet sponsored regimes have suppressed the national history of ethnics. To these populations, it is this history that makes a Pole a Pole and a German a German. When these regimes lost Soviet support, they lost their legitimacy to rule. At this point, public opinion begins to seriously matter.

Undoubtedly, these countries will not rush to support capitalism. But there should be a change from a closed economy to a mixed economy. These countries want economic development and trade, not laissez faire. They will likely develop socialist democracies like France and Japan. In these systems, the businesses are privately owned, but jointly government and business formulate market goals.

With all these hassles ahead--opening markets, economic developments--I'm sure glad George Bush decided to wait before calling an end to the cold war.

Dance of Death?

I would like to express my opinion of the current dance theme, “The Dance of Death.” This is a very morbid theme for a college campus. Death is a harsh word to use for a fun activity. The theme seems to insinuate that all students should dance for the death of the decade. Do we here at Marian believe that the ‘80’s need to die? I feel the 1980’s have been a prosperous time. We should be celebrating the good events of the ‘80’s. I am very much offended by this dance and do not plan to attend.

"The two characteristics to hold on to are patience and perseverance," Kevin O'Day advises all non-traditional students. Being a non-traditional student himself, O'Day had to overcome the fear of walking into a classroom of younger people, and he finally developed confidence.

O'Day graduated from Ben Davis High School and attended Butler University from 1972-1976. After graduation, he worked for Consolidated Conrail for ten years. Frustrated with the world of big business, O'Day went back to school. His exposure to being hired by Cardinal Ritter as a lay coach in baseball and basketball is what influenced his new career choice.

The "small college" personality brought him to Marian, and it's "personal touch" kept him here. "It is nice to be able to find a professor when needed," commented O'Day.

O'Day is married, and he and his wife Cheri are expecting their first child. Cheri is an elementary school teacher and has been teaching for five years.

O'Day himself is a secondary education major working for an English teaching certificate. After earning his certification, he plans on landing a job in a school district. "It is pretty competitive, but my coaching endorsement will help."

During the summers, O'Day attended school at IUPUI and Marian; he completed thirteen hours last summer. He doesn't have much time for leisure, considering he has averaged a twenty hour schedule since his return to college.

"With our economy becoming more and more specialized, a college BS will someday be equivalent to what a high school degree is now," says O'Day. Since he has arrived at Marian, the most influential person to help him has been Dr. Raymond Craig. Craig's ability to relate to a student returning to school after a long absence assisted O'Day the most.

He would like to thank the Marian College student body for being so congenial and accepting of older students in the classroom. He extends his appreciation to Sister Claire Whalen, O.S.F., for the handling of his transcripts and course direction. O'Day would also like to add that Sister Rosanne Taylor, chairman of the Foreign Language Department, and Jim Goebel, from the English Department, have been two very influential people during his years here at Marian.

Student Affairs

Ellen Harrod and Josie Osborne are concerned with student affairs.

As president and secretary of the Student Affairs Committee of College Council, the pair is excited about working with the students of Marian College, but feel that their position is relatively anonymous.

The committee has had three meetings this semester and have found very little to discuss because no one has brought an issue before the committee. Osborne described the function of the committee as, “a forum or a place where students’ voices could be heard.” Both expressed a desire to see the committee become an active participatory committee on campus.

The function of the committee as outlined in the By-Laws of the College Council Constitution are as follows: “This committee shall be concerned with matters of general student welfare in such areas as housing, organizations, activities, publications, discipline, and student campus life.”

Other members of the committee are as follows: Gary Zamber, Karen Couch, Cari Rajchel, Melissa Elpers, John Lowe, William Woodman, and Doug Daugherty.

The next meeting of the Student Affairs Committee will be held Jan. 25 at 2:45 p.m. in the Student Board Meeting Room. If you would like to have an item placed on the agenda, please contact Harrod, ext. 356, or Osborne, ext. 309.

and build an identity within the Franciscan tradition of Marian. With each of Felicetti’s ten major goals, he wanted to know first, the general support and second, the willingness to become personally involved in its implementation. The goals and percentages of general support (GS) and personal involvement (PI) are as follows:

1. Develop a Marian Mentors Training Program by Spring 1990 and implement it by this summer: 95.9% - GS; 59.4% - PI
2. Explore the financial aid structure needed for an all-honors student program by Spring 1990 and implement it by this summer: 93.7% - GS; 50.8% - PI
3. Begin work on a campus wide holistic health program by Jan. 1990 and be ready for initial implementation by Sept. 1990: 95.1% - GS; 55.9% - PI
4. Recreate the core curriculum’s focus by Jan. 1990 to be in use by Sept. 1990: 96.9% - GS; 47.8% - PI
5. Formulate a select few new academic/social programs to be studied this year with an eye toward possible start up in Fall, 1990: 95.2% - GS; 48.8% - PI
6. Begin national searches for a dean of enrollment management and for a director of continuing education, with candidates to be hired by Spring, 1990: 91.7% - GS; 33.3% - PI
7. Lay the foundation for comprehensive enrollment management effort in Admissions by Spring’90: 97.3% - GS; 51.5% - PI
8. Lay the foundation for a comprehensive enrollment management effort in retention by Spring’90: 98.3% - GS; 50% - PI
9. Complete a review of affordable professional support opportunities by Summer, 1990: 98% - GS; 50% - PI
10. Make key decisions about planning the future physical design of campus before Summer, 1990: 100% - GS; 48.5% - PI

Felicetti commented in detail on the topic of greater campus planning. Letters have been sent to three of the original six architectural firms offering $5,000 each to prepare more detailed and modified strategic plans. Felicetti received a report from Dr. Louis Gatto which analyzes usage of space on campus; space which appears to be greatly under-utilized.

Some ideas and hopes for campus planning include re-developing the campus perimeter, landscaping, signage, roadways, lighting and parking, and the assessment of campus facilities options, including a student center, dormitory renovations, air conditioning, computer hardware, library holdings, maintenance and other needs.

Felicetti also spoke about working on scholarships, making the core curriculum exciting and attractive, establishing an admissions outreach program, involving everyone in a retention program, and establishing a support system. After a period for questions, the floor was turned over to Sr. Norma.

Sr. Norma presented the rough draft of the new mission statement which is included in this issue of the Carbon. She said, “It incorporates some statements from the current mission statement, recommendations of Felicetti which have been strongly endorsed by the college community, and goals gleaned from the strategic planning reports and the responses of the faculty and staff to the mission statement of the Sisters of St. Francis.” All present at the Open College Forum were asked for input regarding any ideas concerning the mission statement.
"Beauty and the Beast" praised as a crowd-pleaser

by Cindy Kopence and John Mathis

The children's theatre show this year was Beauty and the Beast. It is a story of a beastly prince (Vito Viscuso) who is turned into a beast by Hodge the Wizard (Dennis McKamey). The Beast is finally set free from the spell 500 years later when Beauty (Kari Palma) tames the Beast. Also in the show were Beauty's sisters (Regina Garza and Susie McOmber), their father (Dan Zielinski), Mikey the Dragon (Jerome Bessler), and Cocky-Olly (Molly Schommer).

The costumes, designed by Mary Sullivan were not only beautiful, but also obviously a labor of love. The set, designed by Paul "Bernie" Killian, was cleverly constructed and wonderfully detailed. The late night sessions really paid off.

Our two favorite characters were the Beast and Mikey. Freshman Viscuso put in a wonderful performance. His transformations from an uncaring prince to a caring individual proved that the moral of the Beauty and the Beast is that happiness and true beauty come from within. Senior Bessler's playful dragon role was a crowd pleaser. He had the most energy of anyone on stage and seemed to enjoy his character.

However, we felt that there were inconsistencies in the performance of the other players. The cast was much too happy in places where another emotion should be present. This could give the wrong impression to children since they saw the cast being happy whether they were doing right or wrong. We do not know if the script or the performers are to blame, but the director should have caught this problem.

All things considered, it was a good show. The actors worked well with each other, and it appeared that the children enjoyed the show. That's the bottom line.

Last week’s column focused on several post-Vatican II factors that have contributed to the reduced percentage of Catholics attending Catholic colleges and universities, thereby giving rise to the critical mass criterion. However, there is another consideration that I believe to be essential to the question of a valid critical mass. This one impacts the concept from within—namely the erosion of the solidarity of dogma.

At some of the leading Catholic institutions of higher education, the courtroom has become the arena for theological conflicts between ordained faculty members and administrators supportive of the teachings of Rome. On the sensitive issue of abortion, Catholics for a Free Choice directly oppose the Church’s position—most recently reaffirmed at the annual meeting of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops—that “no Catholic can responsibly take a ‘pro-choice’ stand....” On the other hand, many non-Catholics are found in the Pro-Life movement.

If critical mass is to be the measure by which Catholic identity is determined, should it be limited to some required ratio of Catholics to non-Catholics? Given the contemporary situation, I think not. Otherwise dissenting theologians, Catholics for a Free Choice, as well as other Catholics who merely give lip service to the faith of their birth would be “in” while non-Catholics who share some of the Church’s most fundamental tenets would be “out.”

Moreover, just as Catholic college students gravitate elsewhere, non-Catholics are attracted to Catholic colleges and universities. During my tenure as president, parents of new students often told me that they selected Marian because it was a religiously-affiliated college though not of their faith. Should these students be excluded from the critical mass? I do not believe so.

Critical mass is, therefore, more complex than simply determining and then achieving a required percentage of Catholics. It should be inclusive rather than exclusive. Actually, the College already has in its mission statement the genesis of this position:

"Marian’s distinctive religious tradition, vital core of its philosophy of life and education, is Catholic. Its climate, however, is ecumenical. Therefore, it welcomes students of all religious persuasions, recognizing that each of the major religious traditions can make important contributions to wisdom, understanding, and moral development."

And this is one person’s opinion.

Accounting dept adds major/minor in Finance

by Dallice Hesselgrave

“We wanted to strengthen both departments and let them concentrate on what they do best,” explained Tim Akin, Chairperson of the Accounting Department. The existing accounting department is expanding to include a minor and major in finance. Formerly the Business Department, chaired by Richard Hoogerwerf, had a concentration in finance, but not a minor or major.

Changes approved by College Council will include transferring the three current finance classes from the Business department to the Accounting/Finance department; offering five new finance classes; changing the Associate of Science degree; and hopefully adding a new full-time faculty member.

Akin had a meeting this week with Sr. Clare Whalen, O.S.F., the Dean of Academic Affairs, to discuss the possibility of a new faculty member. Akin explains that not only is the new faculty member needed to instruct classes, but to help the accounting department keep its personal relationship with students, “We (the accounting department) take a lot of pride in our advising of students. We feel like we’ve been mentors to our students for the last few years and another faculty member will help us to do that better.”

The program will be put into operation beginning with the 1990 fall semester, although students are already being advised on classes within the program. Next year’s juniors will have the opportunity to minor in finance and subsequent classes will be able to major.

Akin stresses the underlying purpose of the program is to “benefit the students” and to “increase student’s opportunities.” He talked about the ever-increasing opportunities in the world of finance.

Hey Basketball Fans -- New Contest!!

How the contest works:

Go to as many men’s and women’s basketball games throughout the season as you can. Keep track of the mileage. The person or persons with the most miles at the end of the season will win. The prizes will be announced at a later date.

Rules:

1. Each participant must check in with the contact person who, for the men’s games will be Don Vogt or Mary Saucerman, and for women’s games the contact person will be Tammy Poling.
2. Those not eligible to participate: Ball players, managers, statisticians, cheerleaders, or anyone who usually travels with the team.
3. Fan Busses will count double toward your mileage totals.

The Booster Club will be sponsoring this contest, if you have any questions, please contact Mikki Poynter at ext. 145 or Brenda Gauck at ext. 193.

The contest will begin with the Taylor tournament on Saturday, December 9. The Fan Bus can be taken to the game, so watch for signs with the posted time.

Who will travel the most fan miles?

The Mission Statement of Marian College

Editor's Note: This draft represents the revised text of the Marian College Mission Statement, which was amended after considering comments from the Marian community. Sr. Norma Rocklage welcomes any additional comments.

Marian College is a vibrant, independent, Catholic, co-educational, comprehensive liberal arts college, established to provide post-secondary education for a diverse population of resident and non-resident students who are preparing to assume leadership in contemporary society. The college aims to make a distinctive contribution as an outstanding college of mentors in the Catholic, Franciscan and ecumenical traditions of higher education.

To realize its fundamental purposes, Marian College seeks to emphasize:
--High academic and teaching standards for faculty, staff and students;
--A liberal arts curriculum which integrates a well-balanced core of general studies with intense study in a specific academic or professional field;
--A supportive community of care and compassion to enable the development of the whole person and the common good of its members;
--The challenge to be responsible agents of society--as servants, leaders and critics of society who demonstrate special concern for the poor and the marginal;
--An acknowledgement of and respect for the scholarly and cultural achievements of the faculty and associated personnel;
--The ongoing search for a mutually enriching synthesis of faith and reason in a context which recognizes that each of the world's major ethical traditions can make important contributions to wisdom, understanding and moral development.

Appreciating the need to redefine the structure of a comprehensive liberal arts, Catholic college in these times of great cultural change, Marian College commits itself to the important task of such redefinition with integrity and creativity.

While engaged in this pursuit, Marian College attempts to reach certain goals which extend its special educational heritage and mission. Thus, the college seeks to:

* Foster a strong academic program to meet the needs of Marian's multi-cultural student population, including students of all races, creeds, and socio-economic backgrounds who have the aptitude and desire to learn;
* Support a Catholic tradition and commitment within an ecumenical climate, encouraging students of all religious persuasions to develop and strengthen their personal faith and to apply spiritual values in their lives. To this end, and with respect for commitment to free inquiry, the faculty urges familiarity with theological and philosophical methods and principles while providing opportunities to measure past and present experience against a background of Judeo-Christian values;
* Develop comprehensive mentor roles for faculty, staff and students. Building on a tradition of close, personal association among faculty, staff and students, the college works to facilitate the development of personal and professional growth as well as group responsibility through effective advising and counseling;
* Cultivate a strong sense of social responsibility and leadership in civic and ecclesiastical communities on the part of students, faculty and staff as they respond to the changing needs of contemporary society;
* Provide that every student admitted to Marian College be eligible to receive an honors scholarship which acknowledges his or her strengths in academics, athletics, service or other talents and characteristics of excellence reflecting Marian's values;
* Promote a campus-wide holistic health environment with emphasis on emotional, physical and spiritual well-being.

Marian believes that with the support of a broad range of college ministry and student life programs, these goals can be achieved through academic programs of high quality that are served primarily by a faculty and staff devoted to excellence as teachers and mentors.

December 5, 1989

by Tina Kunkler

At last Tuesday's Open Forum, Dr. Daniel Felicetti said that although he supports the idea of a student center at Marian College, he does not support the construction of a new building for that purpose. He does not see the need to fulfill the promise of a new student center at Marian.

The birth of the idea for a student center occurred over 20 years ago and the mythology has grown since that time. Designs have been drawn, studies have been conducted to determine financial feasibility, the Old Park School Gym has been removed and we are more than ready to accept it.

If you, Dr. Felicetti, are thinking of establishing St. Francis Hall as a permanent location for a student center, forget it. First, St. Francis does not have enough room for all of the offices, services and activity areas that should be included in a real student center. Also, St. Francis is a resident hall, where people live. The residents of that building should not be subject to the 24-hour happenings of a student center located in their home. Currently, St. Francis lounges and study areas are being taken over for meetings and parties, instead of the public areas. St. Francis as a temporary center has already fostered feelings of discomfort for residents of other halls and commuter students who feel as though they are trespassing in the other students' home.

I cannot see any one other building on campus that would have the space for such facilities. The space may be available in several buildings, but spreading out the services only decentralizes the students, which is the opposite of the proposed effect.

I feel that something new, centralized and neutral, yet belonging to all parties, is required for a real student center to be effective. We should unite as a whole community to begin work on this project immediately. I volunteer some time toward this project. Do you?

The feast of Mary, under her title of the Immaculate Conception, is a special holyday for Marian College since it is the college's patronal feast. It also happens to be the last day of classes, Dec. 8, for the fall semester. There WILL be a time adjustment for classes on that day, Friday, December 8th. I am alerting you in advance that you may plan accordingly. The Mass is scheduled for 10:45 a.m. All morning classes and the 12:30 class periods will be adjusted to meet at least for a 35 minute period as follows: 8:30-9:20 to 8:30-9:05; 9:30-10:20 to 9:15-9:50; 10:30-11:20 to 10:00 - 10:35; Mass 10:45-11:45; 11:30-12:20 to 12:00-12:35; 12:30-1:20 to 12:45-1:20.

Religion in Indianapolis, a history conference, will be sponsored Jan. 20, 1990, by the Marian College Department of History and Political Science, the Marion County-Indianapolis Historical Society and the Indiana Religious History Association at Allison Mansion. Former dean, Sr. LaVerne Frietsch will discuss the educational mission of the Sisters of St. Francis in Indianapolis, along with other presentations on the Baptist, Lutheran, Pentecostal, and Catholic traditions in Indianapolis' history. All interested members of the college are welcome to attend. Contact Dr. Jim Divita for more information at ext. 270.

This is the final Carbon for the decade. See you next year.
