Carbon Editors:
I wish to express my deepest apologies for not signing my name to my editorial. I believe I missed the second edition of the Carbon; I guess C.W. missed that one also.
I am willing to accept any criticism because of my actions. My past four years experience has taught me ignorance is no excuse.
Therefore, the "I" is for Patrick as in Pat. The "T" is for Thomas as in Tommy. And the "M" is for McGraw as in Quick Draw. Put them together and what have you got but Patrick Thomas McGraw. Of course, you may call me Quick Draw if you wish.
I do apologize Ed and shall sign my name in the future. Ed, may I use Q.D. as a trademark?

Pat McGraw
Editors’ Reply to Quick Draw:

I guess you missed the first Carbon too since both your letters have indicated you don't know C.V.'s identification. However since her articles have appeared under “editorials” I thought you could figure out for yourself that she is my co-editor, as was announced in the first Carbon.

Anyone interested please come.
The Vice Lords came of age Monday by edging past the Gods of Hellfire, 13-12. The Gods drew first blood on a one yard plunge by Bill Doherty, following a long completion to Larry Unser. The Lords soon returned the favors as Dave Jongleaux ran the kickoff the distance for the score. The extra point put them ahead 7-6. The next touchdown came as the Gods' Stan Blenke swept end for four yards. In the second half, Paul Gerth iced the game for the Lords with a sweep for the touchdown and point after. The season ended on a sad note for the Gods, but they won't soon be forgotten in the annals of Intramural Football History. For the Vice Lords, their season had to be considered a success, regardless of the outcome of the next game. The Lords must be rated equal to the Wild Bunch, but we'll still take the Bunch.

The second game saw the Ndugos race by an aging Intramural Football Team 19-13. Two long runs by Tony Smith was the difference as Tim "Stomach" Ellinger and Don Morgan could not revive the slumbering IMFTo.
