EDITORIAL

A certain campus policy (that one stating no pets allowed on campus) has come to be a chief concern for the women at White House.

Last night, Karen Marsh met with the White House residents to discuss the fate of Smidgen and her pups. Two things were agreed upon: 1. that the dogs be permitted to stay until the pups are weaned, and 2. that the pups would then be given away (homes have already been found for them). The point of disagreement is with the mother dog. We (and I'm speaking for all the women at the house) are of the opinion that the dog be able to remain on campus with us.

Karen Marsh feels that Smidgen must be put in a temporary home off campus, until Mary Sholeen can take her, because of the policy. The problem, as I see it, involves a policy which has a rational that does not seem to apply outside of dormitory or residence hall living. All 9 of us want the dog to stay--she doesn't disturb our studying or sleeping, she's housebroken, and she herks when strangers (especially if they are male) come to the door. This may sound stupid, but it provides a kind of security for us, being in a house rather than dormitory, to know that if someone were wandering around outside (which is hardly far-fetched considering the number of incidents in the past year of kooky people bothering students), the dog would bring it to our attention.

If the rational for a policy can't be used to support the rule then all you've got are physical letters on a piece of paper--hardly something defensible for an academic institution.

From the Messes:

Richard M. Nixon has won the election. The American people have lost. The people have given Mr. Nixon the mandate that he needs.

The people may expect more controls and secret meetings. During the past four years, Mr. Nixon has used surprise to insure his re-election. The Cambodian invasion, the raid on Vietnamese prisoner of war camps, the trips to China and Russia. The people rejoice at these trips, but there is a deeper meaning involved.

The President has used these surprise tactics to create the illusion of capability. People thought that he was in control, but the domestic scene was suffering. The Vietnam War threatened to destroy the economy and the American people.

Unemployment threatened to reach a new high and prices were crippling the consumer. The people were alienated between right and left and progress seemed stifled.

Since Richard Nixon is now the President of the US, can these problems be solved?

He has not shown the capability or solution. The Nixon years are years of anguish that are disguised with opiates and false promises.

The opiates are results of avoidance. The people try to avoid the death that is happening because when something dies, there is an era of false happiness. This false happiness results from false promises.

Richard Nixon like George McGovern promises easy living and peace, but Nixon has not proven that he is capable. George McGovern offers a new hope not promises. A progressive does not strive to fulfill promises, but strives to change existing problems. Richard Nixon is not a progressive because he is dulling the senses with falseness.

When America finally learns that a real leader is needed, it might be too late. In 1964 the American people elected another such man of falseness, and there was no change. In 1972 the American people have compounded the problem, change has been sacrificed for an inebriated feeling. The deadness is evident and the masses of people have a triumph. The people have just another election and possibly a country.

It would be greatly appreciated if the secretaries of Marian College clubs notify day students in the event of a club activity cancellation. I'm sure other day students have the same complaint as I. I wasted my time, gas money, and a ruined evening when I came for a meeting, waited 20 minutes and found out the activity was cancelled. The club secretary had my phone number, too! Get busy secretaries! How much time does it take to make a phone call??!

Cathy Mattingly

Editorial Afterthought

The bureaucracy of the office of Student Activities in the words of a little known statesman, should be 'made perfectly clear'. In order to sponsor an activity, an organization must fill out a Calendar Reservation Form, a Maintenance and Facilities Request Form (in triplicate), a Check List for Marian College Campus Events, Registration of a Student Event (in duplicate), and Non-College Speakers Form (in triplicate).

As George Washington Carver once said, "Peanuts!".

Best Rumor of the Week:

Hearsay has it that after the election Sister Francesca said: "The problem with President Nixon is that he has illusions of adequacy."

HOME COMING MUMS

Booster Club
It is now nearing the end of what has been a long week for the Gods of Hellfire and the Lone Rangers. Anyone who saw last Sunday's games will know what kind of a game the title clash should be. In the first game of the afternoon, the Gods had to come from behind to squeeze by a psyched-up Butt, 13-7. The Gods drew first blood on a 20 yard first half pass from Bill Doherty to Jim Herbe. The momentum switched in the second half as Butt dominated until the closing seconds. Ric Martin caught a 25 yard pass from Joe Kusmitz. Fran Ketter's extra point put Butt ahead 7-6. But as time was running out, the Doherty-Herbe duo got hot and the Gods scored to gain their birth in the finals. The Gods will be seeking their second win over the Rangers this season, as they posted an earlier 13-6 victory over them.

The second game was another down-to-the-wire affair as the Lone Rangers edged the defending champ Vic Lords 13-6. The Rangers took the half-time lead on a Ken Aust to Dan Heyden scoring pass of 75 yards. Ken Aust completed the extra-point on a pass to Ken Tyrrell. The second half produced more offense as the Lords started to put it together. Pat Zappo completed a 15 yard touchdown pass to Jay Farrell but the conversion attempt failed. With minutes remaining, Ken Tyrrell took over as quarterback and gave the Rangers their second score on a pass to Ken Aust. The game was probably the most fiercely-battled contest I almost played in.

So now we're down to two teams, the Gods of Hellfire and The Lone Rangers. They will meet this Sunday at 2pm for the Intramural Football Championship. That's what the last eight weeks have been all about. After Sunday, the 1972 season will be history.

WAA Volleyball

Once again Vazuri displayed its expert skill and might coming team efforts to defeat a tough Volumptuous Volleys in two consecutive games. This championship team, with only one loss under its belt, is led by such individuals as Deb Burton, Kaye Lindsey, and Ed Clay coupled with the set-up-spike combination of Pinkney-Ray. These elements added to the firey serves of Teresa Ash constructs a possible run in of last years volleyball playoffs with Vazuri on the top rung.

Monday night's action also provided another win for Gagen's Gansters, this time to the disappointment of East Wing. The Gansters, the only other team besides Vazuri with one loss, is composed of a tough and powerful roster which could possibly knock Vazuri off that top rung, initially paced by such servers as Sue Lengyel and Pat Wilcox, not to be underestimated by Kathy Gagen, Paula Vechione, De Szemborski, and Mae Kress. Like Vazuri, this is a two year team, which in effect would make a possible play-off between the two an even more competitive and interesting match. Each team has two games remaining before the volleyball season ends.

For their sixth consecutive win, Squatty and Friends trounced the Valley of the Dolls. Blue Yarn extended its streak of victory by defeating 3H Company. Main Ingredients once again came through with a win by pounding the Red Hot Mammes while the Snaeches chalked up an easy victory over Flisheal's Farm Outs. Marshmallows managed to defeat an understaffed L&M team despite a valient team effort in the third game to threaten a Marshmallow victory.

So until next week's exciting action, this is the old coup rounding the thirteenth end hopefully heading for home. - WAP

Due to short week before Thanksgiving and budgetary problems, there will be no Carbon next week.
