EDITORIAL

Within the past few weeks, the American people have been exposed to one of the biggest scandals of our history. Several indictments have been handed down in the Watergate Incident involving top White House aids and I would imagine more are yet to come.

There are several comments which come to my mind in hearing the details to the scandal. First of all, President Nixon has prided himself on the structure and aloofness of the White House. Communications going in and coming out of the White House and people wanting to see the President have been thoroughly screened by the President's two top aids, Erlichman and Haldeman, the so called "Palace Guards!" For years the press of this country have criticized the Nixon Administration for not being accessible to them and the American public. In light of this closed door policy of the administration, the Watergate issue illustrates the extreme danger in this type of structure. The President has only one source of information concerning national import, namely from Erlichman and Haldeman. If this source of information is tainted and involved in real danger results in interpreting events and problems. This incident should call Nixon's attention for a more open White House.

Secondly, the bugging of the Democratic Headquarters is indicative of the tactics used by the Committee to Re-Elect the President. The question at hand seems to be: Why did the Committee resort to this type of activity? I would think that the bugging and the break in of the Democratic Headquarters indicates a definite lack of faith in the American people to elect a qualified candidate for President. Thus, the actions by the Committee along with the top White House aids is a fault to the democratic system.

In conclusion, I would hope that all persons involved in this scandal are exposed and a thorough restructuring of the White House staff take place.

This incident demonstrates that there really was a choice of the lesser of two evils in last November's election - the only problem is that the 'people' chose the wrong lesser.

From the Masses:

Dear Editors,

I would like to air a gripe. It concerns graduating from good ol' Marian College. It is a question of what's fair or not. If a senior comes around to the last stretch and is short a few hours, he or she will not graduate. (This is very understandable.) That person has a few options; they can go to summer school or wait till the September session. But the diploma they receive will be dated May of the next year.

I proposed the question to a "high ranking official" of the college, since the seniors pay for the printing of the diploma, (cont. next col.)

why couldn't it be printed along with my classmates and held till I finished my six hours of summer school? That way I could go through graduation ceremony with my class (receive a blank diploma) and all would be happy. You could lock the "real McCoy" in a vault and if I fail to attend summer school, you could burn it and not lose a thing. The answer is that the school write. This person said," It would be unfair to have the May, 1973 printed on your diploma if you don't finish till July, 1973." Having successfully completed logic at this institution, the conclusion is this: It would be fair to have May 1974 printed when I completed in July, 1973 (since the diplomas are printed once a year), so I guess 10 months later is better (for someone) than 2 months earlier.

I planned my hours and schedule so I don't hold it against anyone that I will be late. I just wonder is it fair? I planned some time ago to get married and take less hours in order to work. I also planned to finish in summer school and receive a letter from school saying I have completed my time, but don't have a diploma yet. But one day my father (who pays the bills) asked if I could be allowed to go through the motions of graduation since July isn't that far away. So I thought I would just ask to see what run around I would get. It does not bother me, I planned on it (I have been here long enough to know) but what do I write home? (To all emotional involved students, I have already written home.) But I ask, what is fair?

Dear Editors:

Last weekend I attended the Indiana-Ohio College all star game. I was pleasantly surprised when I saw Bill Smith on the starting team for the Indiana stars. He started with such standouts as Steve Downing and John Ritter from I.U. and Dannie Gamauf and John Price from Purdue. I think this is quite an accomplishment for Smitty, who is the first Marian player ever to be named to the all-star team.

SPORTS SHORTS

The intramural softball season is quickly drawing to a close with the play-offs already underway. In a game Monday to determine the fourth playoff team, the Over-the-Fence Gang defeated the Moppet Men 15-9. (The Moppet Men were not at full strength due to numerous injuries.)

In their first playoff game, Coach Rich Martin's undefeated MFIC's emerged victorious over the Master Batters 9-6. In the other game the Pit Shit defeated the Over-the-Fence Gang in a sloppily played contest. The second round of the play-offs will be played this Sunday with the Master Batters playing the Over-the-Fence Gang and the Pit pitted against the MFIC. The final standings for the league are:
